

Quick Guide :: CHOOSING A RESEARCH TOPIC

The First Step

Choosing a topic can often be the most challenging part of a research assignment, especially if your instructor asks you to write or talk about anything you want. The first step is: Define your assignment. To do this considering the following questions:

- : What kind of research project are you doing? (Term paper, speech, debate)
- : What is its length? (5 pages, 10 pages)
- : How long do you have to complete it? (2 days, 2 weeks, 2 months)
- : What kind of resources do you need? (Books, scholarly journals, primary resources, literary criticisms)

Where To Get Ideas

Ideas can come from just about anywhere...

- : Start with yourself. Select a topic that interests you... one you know something about or want to know something about.
- : Review course materials. Ideas can come from issues and subjects covered in course readings and lectures.
- : Ask your instructor. Your instructor can be an excellent source for topic suggestions, as well as recommend readings.
- : Check an encyclopedia. Review general and specialized encyclopedia articles. They can provide summaries and bibliographies to get you started on a topic.
- : Conduct preliminary searches in an article database. A quick search in a multidisciplinary article or newspaper database can provide a multitude of topic ideas. Try Expanded Academic ASAP, LexisNexis, or CQ Researcher.
- : Talk to a librarian: Your librarian can be a great source for topic ideas, as well as provide information about helpful research resources.

Resources on the Web

There are many places on the World Wide Web that offer resources for choosing a topic. Here are a couple of suggestions:

: Best Information on the Net: Paper Topics

<http://library.sau.edu/bestinfo/Hot/hotindex.htm>
A listing of WWW sites on various current topics such as affirmative action, the death penalty, and welfare reform.

: Public Agenda Topics

<http://www.publicagenda.org>
A nonprofit public opinion research and education organization website that contains excellent overviews, research reports and articles on major controversial topics.

: Backgrounders From the Online NewsHour

<http://speakout.com/activism/issues>
A public TV news program that offers transcripts of discussions on issues under broad categories such as Congress, the economy, the military, transportation, religion, etc.

Resources at the Library

Ask a librarian! We can help you find topic selection resources in the subject area related to your research assignment.

: Opposing Viewpoints Series

This print series focuses on current controversial topics of debate, presenting pro/con arguments by prominent spokespeople representing different aspects of issues.

[NOTE: To view a list of all titles in this series, browse the series option in the Harvest Catalog]

Helpful Handouts

Once you've chosen a topic, the following handouts may be useful. Available online @ <http://www.lib.ucdavis.edu/dept/instruc>

- : 5 Steps to Better Library Research
- : Using Harvest
- : Finding Articles
- : Scholarly vs. Popular Journals